The Rice NW Museum News
from Julian Gray, Executive Director
via AFMS newsletter,
June-July 2015 edition

The Rice Northwest Museum of Rocks and Minerals has been named as an Affiliate of the Smithsonian Institution. This mark of distinction signifies the achievement of a goal long held by the Rice Museum's originator, according to co-founder Sharleen Harvey. "Being a Smithsonian Affiliate confirms that our museum has the high caliber required to assist our schools and community in earth science education. It assures that visitors and supporters of the museum can have confidence in the quality and content of the exhibits, plus enjoyment in viewing fine minerals, fossils, meteorites, and lapidary specimens."

Established in 1996, Smithsonian Affiliations is a national outreach program that develops long-term collaborative partnerships with museums and other educational and cultural organizations in order to enrich communities with Smithsonian resources.

The long-term goal of Smithsonian Affiliations is to facilitate a mutual relationship among Affiliate organizations and the Smithsonian Institution to increase discovery and inspire lifelong learning in communities across the United States.

The new relationship between the Rice Museum and the Smithsonian will bring great things to museum visitors in the Pacific Northwest. Not only will the Rice Museum be able to borrow objects and exhibits from the Smithsonian's collections, but the Museum will also gain opportunities to collaborate on research projects and to sponsor exciting programs from renowned visiting scholars.

"We expect the Affiliation to serve our community well," explains Julian Gray, Rice Museum executive director. "It will help us increase awareness of our excellent museum and attract more visitors to the area, allowing more people to experience our own world-class exhibits, events, and educational programs."

WORKING WITH FAULTY ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT CAN MAKE YOU BECOME A REAL LIVE WIRE!

by Mark Nelson, Safety Committee
via CFMS newsletter, May 2015 edition

One of the great things about the lapidary hobby is that most of the powered equipment that we use is simple, reliable and serviceable. Saws, polishers, grinders and such are often passed down through various users to clubs and from clubs to individuals. With just basic maintenance a piece of equipment that is 40 years old can perform as well as it did when it was new!

One of the hazards we face when we work with older electrical equipment is in the electrical service. Extension cords and connections are not meant to last forever and must be inspected and serviced or replaced as needed. Here are some of the common conditions found on lapidary equipment that must be corrected:

Grounding. Grounding is the process used to safely eliminate unwanted voltage by directing that voltage to a safe connection to the earth. Electrical equipment must be properly grounded. At one time buildings were constructed without integral grounding (that round hole in a plug outlet connected to a little green grounding wire). When electrical devices, such as polishers, were manufactured with internal grounding their power cords had two flat prongs and a round ground prong. When the new three-prong cords would not connect to the old two-prong outlets, users simply cut off the round ground prong. Now the equipment could be used, but there was no longer protection from electrocution! If your equipment has a cord with the grounding prong removed it must be fixed. Buy a grounded plug and replace the hazardous one. It is easy to do with a screwdriver, snips and a pocket knife.

Frayed Connections. With time and use the point at which a power cord connects with a piece of electrical equipment can become frayed. This will eventually lead to either the equipment shorting out, a fire, injury or all of the above. When you find this condition you may be able to re-insert the cord into the device's connection box and tighten the clamping screws. Otherwise, an electrical appliance shop can replace the cord at a small charge.

Exposed electrical openings, wires or terminals.

Electrical hazards exist when wires or other electrical parts are exposed. Wires and parts can be exposed if a cover is removed from an electrical connection, outlet or breaker box. Electrical terminals in motors, appliances, and electronic equipment may be exposed. Older equipment may have exposed electrical parts. If you contact exposed live electrical parts, you will be shocked. You need to recognize that an exposed electrical component is a hazard. Replacement covers for holes and motors are available at your local hardware store and typically need only a screwdriver to make them safe.

Extension Cords: Defective or inadequate insulation is a hazard. Insulation prevents the electrical conductors from contacting each other or you. A split or cut extension cord that exposes the internal wires is a sign that there may be more severe damage that you cannot see. Replace damaged cords. Never attempt to repair a damaged cord with tape. Never hang extension cords from nails or sharp objects. Do not run extension cords through doors or windows.

Ground Fault Circuit Interruptors: Many industrial plants and construction sites are using 2-foot extension cords equipped with a 3-way plug fitting and a built in GFCI. These devices interrupt the electrical circuit to a load when a fault circuit of 6mA or more is detected. It has to be manually reset after a trip incident, an important feature that prevents equipment from restarting without correcting the problem. Cost: between $19 and $59.

Of course, always disconnect the power to the cord or equipment before performing service or repairs. Be safe out there!
